ADVERTISEMENT.

AFTER the many PREFACES contained in the subsequent pages, it will be sufficient to observe, of this Edition, that neither pains nor expence have been spared, to render it superior to every other. In point of exterior, it is believed, that it hath as yet no rival, either in ornaments, printing, or paper. In respect to its contents, it will be seen, that the Prolegomena have been differently arranged, and considerably augmented; the Text given with accuracy from the best readings; and the Annotations not only retrenched, where futile or needless, but interspersed with a variety of new illustrations. The present Editor hath presumed to deviate from the usual mode of printing the Author's name, by the omission of the letter A in the last syllable, viz. SHAKSPERE for SHAKSPEARE; but he thinks himself warranted in this alteration, by the fac simile of the AUTHOR'S subscription to his Will, as well as by the invariable custom of entering the names of his family in the Register-Book of the Parish of Stratford-upon-Avon. The ancient method of spelling the partial derivation of the name will equally justify the present adoption, if primitive accuracy be preferable to modern variations—as in Spencer, where it is written, and explained in the Glossary, SPERE, a spear. In the mode of printing too, he hath ventured to depart from the common mode, by rejecting the long ſ in favour of the round one, as being less liable to error from the occasional imperfections of the letter f, and the frequent substitution of it for the long ſ; the regularity of the print is by that means very much promoted, the lines having the effect of being more open, without really being at any additional distance. How far the Editor, by what he hath done, may have accomplished his object, it becomes not him to determine. He, however, awaits the Sentence of the PUBLIC, with the less apprehension, from a consciousness of the assistance with which he hath been favoured. To those Gentlemen, who have not only corrected their Notes, as printed before, but increased the obligation, by fresh communications; he begs leave to return his most grateful acknowledgments.

His Royal Highness GEORGE Prince of WALES.

SIR

If this Edition of the immortal Shakspere posseses any merit in preference to it's predecessors, it may be attributed to the influence of your illustrious patronage; on it's first being offer'd to the world, YOUR ROYAL HIGHNESS was graciously pleased to countenance the undertaking, & it thence became more eminently my duty, & my zeal — to spare neither care nor expence in the execution of the work. —— If I have fortunately succeeded so far as to render it in any degree worthy Your Royal attention, & approbation, I shall think myself happy; being

Sir

YOUR ROYAL HIGHNESS'S

most dutiful & devoted Servant,

John Bell.
